DESCRIPTION

At Tricon, the growth of our company will be through expanding our trading lines and increasing our volumes. To do this, we need good traders. While we do strategically hire Traders when needed, we feel the ultimate way to grow our company will come from within. For that reason, we aim to hire individuals into our Operations group, spend at least 3 years teaching them the operations/logistics role and the basics of trading, and when the opportunity arises, transition the best candidate from Operations into Trading. Our Operations staff is directly linked with the Traders they work with, aiding in both the day-to-day operations and in their education for the future role. Some of the specific activities include:

Operations Group

The operations group directly supports traders by

- (i) implementing the logistics of the trades that have been made
- (ii) looking for opportunities to develop new trades
- (iii) working with traders to resolve the inevitable complications that arise

The major objectives of an Operations Department employee includes:

- (i) Ensuring product moves from Point A to Point B in a timely, cost-effective and undamaged condition
- (ii) Ensuring that all documentation required in destination country is available on time
- (iii) Keeping all parties up-to-date on transactions (supplier, customer, shipping company, ancillary service providers such as quality inspectors, etc.)
- (iv) Keeping Company Information Systems up-to-date
- (v) Dealing with the unforeseen

Role of a Trader

Some of the key elements to be a successful trader are:

- (i) being able to absorb and distill a lot of information and to make decisions based on that information
- (ii) being able to build relationships with customers, suppliers and co-workers around the world
- (iii) having a quick, commercially-oriented mind
- (iv) being well organized
- (v) being able to think creatively

The physical trading business often involves taking advantage of geographical arbitrage, and so it is vital for a trader to comprehensively understand the logistics of shipping product around the world. Consequently almost all successful physical traders in any commodity have passed through the Operations Group.
